There is business, dollars and cents, and perhaps a goad many of them in it. The man who owns a farm, with fine timber or mineral ores, though anxious to sell, cannot always find purchasers, can't go out and hunt them, don't know where to find them if he could. But when he places specimens of his timber and ores before the public eye he does effective advertising, without costing him either time or money. But whether it results in material benefit to him at the time or not, it does benefit the section and increases derectly or indirectly the general value or property.

We trust the people of the mountain section will respond to this movement in earnest, and that the wood and mineral display at the coming fair will be a good one, and then we hope to see it imitated in other sections."
